Designer: James Irvine

Typology: Chair

Year: 2003

Description:

Togetherness is a pleasure that is found in the pleasure of others. The art of making a shared moment cherishable is nothing if not highly personal. One thing is sure: in the masterful combination of elements that create an informal ambience, objects are paramount: they need to be appropriate, discreet and pleasant props that adapt to the context. This is why we wanted to make ZETA, a line that embodies an absolutely original idea for fold-and-stow furniture. Chairs and tables that are amazingly easy to set up and put away. You see, order and disorder are made up of the same elements just differently arranged.
